Job Posting COMMUNICATIONS MANAGER

Application deadline has been extended to 13 October 2020.

- Can you write a media release in your sleep?
- Can you tweet with one hand tied behind your back?
- Does the idea of working on a wide range of issues such as immunization, drug policy, population mental wellness, anti-racism, truth and reconciliation, and climate action get you excited?

If you answered yes to these questions, then you will be interested to hear that the Canadian Public Health Association (CPHA) needs a Communications Manager.

- Are you passionate about communications?
- Are you a really good writer (and we mean really good)?
- Does the idea of marketing new concepts get your blood pumping?
- Are you fluently bilingual (English/French)?
- Do you enjoy working in a team, but can get the job done by yourself?

If you answered yes to all of the preceding questions, you might have what it takes.

Reporting to the Executive Director, the Communications Manager works with CPHA staff to develop and implement communications strategies that will most effectively support and reinforce CPHA's vision and mission. The Communications Manager will support both internal and external communications needs of the Association.

Working for a non-governmental organization means that you finish the day knowing that you have made a difference for the better. The salary range for this position is $65,000-$75,000 dependent on the qualifications and experience of the successful candidate. CPHA offers a comprehensive benefits package.

During the COVID-19 outbreak, CPHA is supporting employees with flexible work from home arrangements to help them meet the multiple demands on their time – from childcare, to work, to concern about family and friends. If physical distancing protocols are still in place, in-person interviews will be replaced with phone or video interviews.
