About Primary Care

Northern Health is committed to working with physicians and the Divisions of Family Practice to implement a model of primary and community health care service delivery that is centered on the person and their family.

This approach involves creating interprofessional teams who work in collaboration with primary care providers to provide a range of health care services. This model of service delivery will increase the quality of care by providing continuity of care over time and across settings and result in better long-term health outcomes.

From a Primary Care team member

I joined Northern Health in 2001 as a Home Care Nurse and am currently in a Primary Care Nurse role. As a PCN, my role has expanded enabling me to provide a broader range of care. A core enabler of the work we do is establishing a trusting relationship with clients, listening to them and allowing them to make the appropriate choices for their health care needs.

Northern Health has provided a lot of learning opportunities and mentorship with the transition to Team Based Care. Our team is very supportive of one another, caring and empathetic, building one another and the team up, making for a great place to work!

Cindy, Primary Care Nurse - Vanderhoof
